A significant coincidence was that on the day of the Marquis's landing in America. An Englishman called at a New York newspaper office and tried to insert a "personal" to the effect that an American lady might secure a seat as a marchioness in the Westminster Abbey to witness the coronation of King Edward. The would-be advertiser, after many questions, admitted that the woman might marry the Marquis before the coronation. The "personal" was not printed, but the Marquis was the object of many inquiries. As a write-hunter, the Marquis was hardly a success. He was known to have letters of introduction to Mrs. Potter Palmer, in Chicago, and to Miss Adams, daughter of former Congressman Adams, of Illinois.
